It's funny that we all want to achieve success, and yet it takes most of us so long to actually get there. Some of us never really make it at all. Others get there, but not until they're firmly in their "golden years" and too old to really enjoy the fruits of their labors. There has to be a better way, doesn't there? Actually, there is. Well, more accurately, there are. 'The Shortcut to history, you would see one overarching trend emerge - we're doing things faster. Speed is the rule of modern life. Everything has been picking up steam. We drive faster. We work faster (and longer). We eat faster. We shop faster. In short, we live faster. That increase in pace doesn't just apply to everyday life. They also apply to the amount of time necessary to generate significant financial results. Not on board with that idea just yet? Consider the following achievements, listed in historical order: * It took John D. Rockefeller almost 50 years to become a billionaire. * It took Michal Dell 14 years. * It took Bill Gates 12 years. * It took Jerry Yang of Yahoo four years. * It took Pierre Omidyar of eBay three years. * It took Andre Mason of Groupon just two years. What do you see? Is there a common trend? Sure, there is. Each successive individual required substantially less time to reach billionaire status. We have made it possible to achieve what once took most of a lifetime in just a few years. Of course, that depends largely on technology and the intelligent application of that technology to your life and plans, but it is possible to see success fast, while you still have the energy and time to actually enjoy living life on your own terms. The hacks, tips, and strategies found within 'The Shortcut to Success' will help ensure that you are able to supercharge your path to success. There's no reason to slave away for decades. You can achieve your dreams in just a few years.
